

CHAPTER 2

WHAT?

The first day started with anticipation as I went sceptical on whether I will be able to make my presence, building up interactions and collaborating with fellow team groups to an optimistic limit. But within few minutes the mentors showed the bright side with stories and their experience within the module and eventually, involved me within the flock of birds for an excursion.

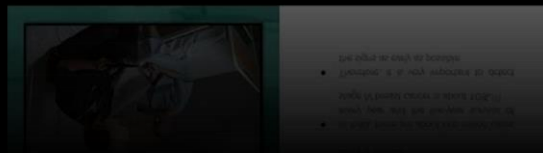

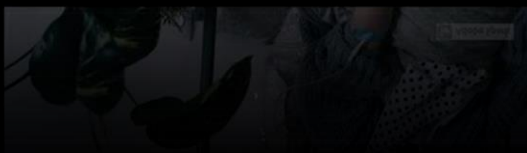

Though I always felt like putting my works into a script, add voice and present them in front of everyone but I could not, maybe it is me just being myself. Due to this persistent hesitation, I was not able to place myself in the spotlight, but I tried my best to interact and engage with group activities. From working on drawing task to making a video in just a couple of days to being a part of the artist activity to executing a small TEDx talk to encapsulating views on the concept of Bird in Hand, working on Mural and representing our V-Simulator conference, with every element of conversations conveyed a part of a team was known and I felt being a part of it.

Within the team except for Eoin, the rest were Indian student so, the interaction was a bit comfortable to put thoughts together and solve the puzzle. Drawing and video were on self-interests, but everyone praised each other and assisted to improve when required. Especially for the conference, Cheran took the lead and the rest shared thoughts to tweak, add more elements, and brought in a collective input. I was glad to read my words and making inception for our conference as well as share my ideas on including Virtual Reality and Augmented Reality elements for virtual entertainment of the viewers.

Activity 2: TEDx

This session one was delightful as I did have one of my friends in Dublin within our group of 3 and the topics to put voice into were flamboyant. The first phase was all about hobbies – which included Athletics, Pool, TT and Badminton from my end – and we all had a fun interaction listening, clapping, praising each other for their efforts. The second phase was lovely as I had to speak on “Power of mind” (I guess), and it is one of the most preferred topics for me to speak on due to my interest in building virtuosos and unravelling the power of the human mind.
